The Hunting Party: A Novel, by Lucy Foley (William Morrow, $26.99)

"Lucy Foley's The Hunting Party is a slick, streamlined murder mystery set on a remote Scottish luxury estate. A group of old friends get together for their yearly New Year's trip, but after over a decade of closeness, some of them may be near the breaking point. Foley uses the multiple-narrator approach to distort the reader's perspective and challenge their assumptions, but it doesn't feel excessive. With multiple puzzles that come together to create the bigger picture and a short timeline that adds to the claustrophobic urgency, this novel is a devilishly thrilling winter read." —Annie Metcalf, Magers & Quinn Booksellers, Minneapolis, MN

The Care and Feeding of Ravenously Hungry Girls: A Novel, by Anissa Gray (Berkley, $26)

"For lovers of An American Marriage comes a thoughtful debut about family, secrets, and the damage one's choices can cause to those you love. Told from many perspectives within one complex family, this novel tugged at me from all angles. I found myself understanding and empathizing with all the characters at different times, even though their choices and the consequences of those choices were vastly in contrast to one another. A very strong debut." —Jamie Southern, Bookmarks, Winston-Salem, NC

Another Indie Favorite
Eat the Apple: A Memoir, by Matt Young (Bloomsbury Publishing, $16) "To take the memories of a combat veteran and transform them into something funny, tender, and even whimsical at times is a delicate dance. Matt Young's Eat the Apple does this in frank flashes, exposing the senseless acts of cruelty inherent in military training and its psychological effects on soldiers. His unrelenting refusal to be pitied and the humor in his self-awareness are what make this memoir especially readable. Although you'll cringe with him during vulnerable and humiliating moments, his ownership of these experiences translates into a sort of wisdom you can take away, making Eat the Apple both a playful and cautionary war tale."

For Ages 9 to 12

Lety Out Loud, by Angela Cervantes (Scholastic Press, $16.99) "One of the most difficult things a kid faces is feeling confident enough to do something new and challenging. It's made that much harder when English isn't your first language and you, like our main character, Lety, are challenged to write fantastic descriptions for shelter animals. Lety Out Loud is a book about succeeding when things are tough and making a space for yourself when you're in a new place. And it's a book about loving dogs, which means it's practically a perfect book!" —Melissa Fox, Watermark Books & Café, Wichita, KS

For Teen Readers

The Art of Losing, by Lizzy Mason (Soho Teen, $18.99) "Sibling relationships don't come much more fraught and complex than they do in Lizzy Mason's stellar debut. The aftermath of an alcohol-centric high school party leaves Audrey in a coma and Harley reeling, forced to face head-on some awful truths about her closest relationships. A surprise reconnection with a childhood friend brings her demons to the forefront and allows her to finally stare them—and everything she's been ignoring—in the face. The stark honesty of this story will crack open your heart and then heal it." —Melissa Posten, The Novel Neighbor, Webster Groves, MO

The New Neighbors, by Sarah McIntyre (Penguin Workshop, $17.99) "The bunny family is very excited to meet their new neighbors, the rats. The other animal neighbors aren't so thrilled when they hear the news—they have unkind and embellished ideas of what their rat neighbors might be like. As all the tenants go downstairs to meet them, they're in for a surprise! This is a busy, colorful book with detailed interior illustrations of each animal's house, plus a lesson on not judging somebody before you meet them yourself." —Andrew King, University Book Store, Seattle, WA
